BACKGROUND: Mauritius gained independence from the United Kingdom in 1968. Prime Minister Sir Anerood Jugnauth resigned in 2017 in favor of his son Pravind, whose party won a rare parliamentary majority in 2019. Once a low-income, agriculturally based economy, Mauritius is now a diversified, upper-middle-income country that attracts considerable foreign investment and has one of the Africa region’s highest GDPs per capita. The government is trying to modernize the sugar and textile industries while promoting diversification into such other areas as information technology and financial and business services. Services and tourism remain important economic drivers, and maritime security is a priority.

The overall rule of law is well respected in Mauritius. The country’s property rights score is above the world average; its judicial effectiveness score is above the world average; and its government integrity score is above the world average.

The regulatory framework has undergone a series of reforms and continues to be competitive. No minimum capital is required to start a business, and the overall start-up process has been simplified. Labor regulations are relatively flexible. Monetary stability has been relatively well maintained.

The trade-weighted average tariff rate is 1.1 percent, and several nontariff measures are in force. An efficient and transparent investment framework supports foreign investment inflows. The open investment regime is underpinned by a nondiscriminatory legal system. Private banks dominate the financial sector.
